

A mobile station, such as a cellular or PCS phone, in a wireless communication system transmits position information to the system server. The mobile station may communicate position location and movement tracking information between the mobile station and the wireless communication infrastructure.

-43-